

OILTON RECOVERS FROM 'PUBLICITY'

Blame Delivered by Press
Agony Did Not Permanently Harm Town.

IS A GENUINE CITY

Brick Buildings Going Up
Industries Are Being Located.

A representative of The World had occasion to visit a couple of miles to the north of Tulsa, Okla., on Friday. He found a town which was quite famous for its oil industry. At first he laid out the town with a compass, and then he went to the oil fields. He found that the oil industry was not the only thing that was going on in Tulsa. There were many other things going on. He found that the town was recovering from the publicity it had received. He found that the town was a genuine city. He found that the town was a place where industries were being located. He found that the town was a place where brick buildings were going up.

A Bony City.
But let me say, Tulsa is not a bony city. It is a city of many things. It is a city of many people. It is a city of many industries. It is a city of many brick buildings. It is a city of many things.

Easter Millinery That Is Really Different

One's first impression of these very new and truly fascinating hats is that they present many departures from the general style tendencies of the earlier hats shown. That subtle charm of individuality for which our hats this season have been famed attaches to these—individuality and distinctiveness, and yet they are in perfect harmony with the dictates of Paris and New York arbiters of millinery modes for Easter, 1916.
